PROGRAM

The European Year of Development: approaches, issues & results

This 1.5 day-long Workshop brings together scholarly experts on Europe, Latin America and the Caribbean and Africa to discuss how EU & European development policies are established and implemented with partners around the world. Given the fact that the EU collectively is not only the largest provider of Official Development Assistance, but also that 2015 was the European Year of Development, we center our conference on issues of development and cooperation with nations and regions around the globe. The latter is particularly important as the UN revised the Millennium Development Goals as well. This conference enables us to analyze how the EU advocates and integrates development policy in its external relations and foreign policy, while also placing EU policies within the larger development framework of the UN, and comparing it to the development priorities of the U.S.

Miami's location on the margins of South America and the Caribbean necessitates a discussion of the EU's role in foreign aid and relations among European, Caribbean and African nations in the post-colonial landscape. Since the topic of development is multifaceted, we included scholars from various schools and departments, including Sociology, Economics, Political Science, International Relations as well as all of our relevant area studies centers. We encourage participation from Miami's non-profit and NGO development organizations.
